

Three "Globetrotters" Now Studying at Local College

Girl Who Lived in Hawaii, Army Veteran, Engineer's Daughter Begin Courses

Among the students at Dickinson Junior College this year are three who have unusual backgrounds—a girl who lived in Hawaii until after the attack on Pearl Harbor, a young man who has served with the Canadian and British armies, and a girl whose father is a civil engineer and who has traveled so much that her most heart-felt wish is that she "might stay one whole year in one place."

Miss Marian Link spent the first 13 years of her life in Hawaii. She lived on Kauai, which, she explained, is known as "the garden island." There she lived on a sugar plantation with her parents until June 1942, when they came to the United States and settled in Virginia.

Marian attended high school in that state and then entered the local junior college to take a course in physical education in preparation for a teaching career.

Brings Grass Skirts

She is an attractive blond girl who has brought with her the grass skirts and costume worn by the native Hawaiian women in their dances. Yesterday fellow students teased her a little by saying that she could dance the native American dances but every once in a while the swing of the hula crept into her dancing.

Miss Frederica Anderson would find it difficult to give an address other than the junior college. She was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, but there is nothing of the Midwest in her speech because she has lived in too many different places to acquire an accent. At present her father is in Ethiopia, an engineer working for the government there. She has aunts, other relatives, and friends in this country, so there will always be some place to go for vacations.

One of the places with which she is familiar is the Canal Zone, where she lived while her father was on an engineering job. She has not yet reached any conclusion about the courses she plans to take because she is in the preparatory section at the college.

Visits Many Countries

Robert Miller, whose parents live in Scarsdale, N. Y., is now only 23, but, he says, there are only five countries in the world in which he has never been. At 13 he began visiting different states during his vacations, on trips during which he and a friend earned their way by doing any sort of odd job that was available.

He says that one summer his father made a bet with him that he couldn't start out with $10, stay three weeks, and come back with $10. He and his companion won the bet easily, succeeding in staying away all summer and returning with $150.

Bob joined the Canadian army and, during the North African campaign, transferred to the British army. He served with the British for almost three years in the China-Burma-India theater and insists that the only time he ever was worried was when he heard that his mother was seriously ill. From his accounts of things that happened, it is certain that he was most uncomfortable at times.

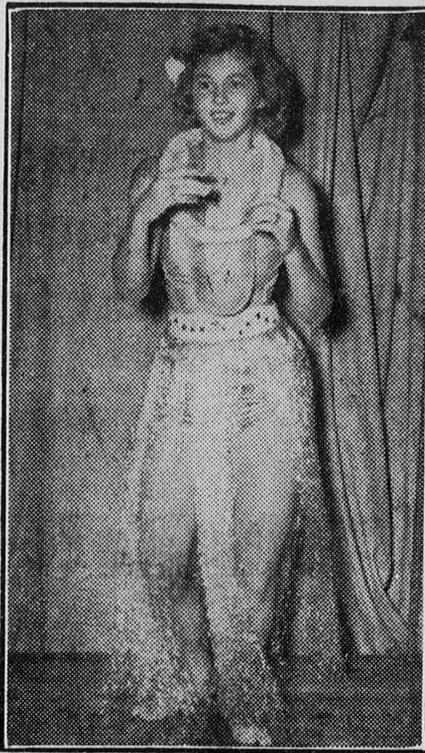

At present he is at the junior college studying the things necessary to take up the career in advertising

Continued on Page 11, This Section

VETERAN TRAVELERS ENROLL AT COLLEGE

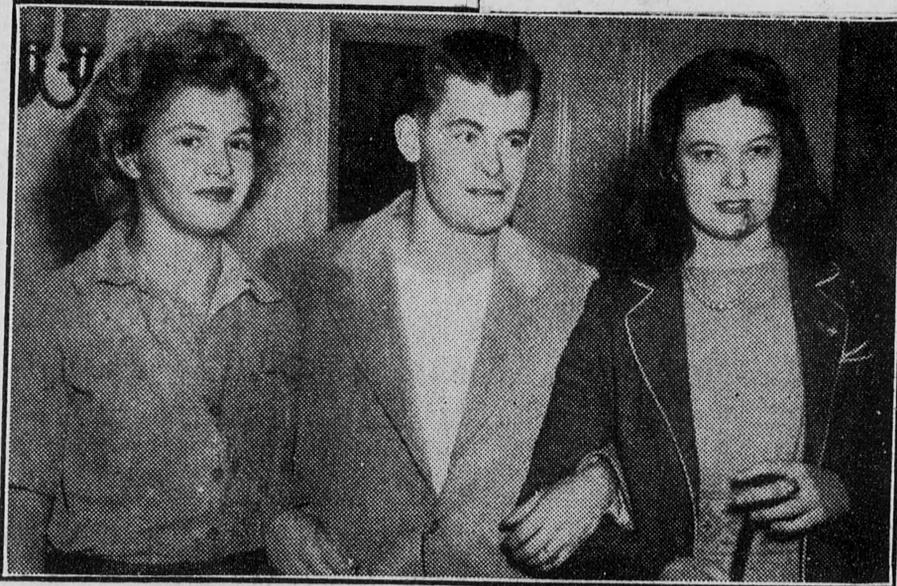

Continued from Page 1, This Section

which he is planning for the future. He is not studying any foreign languages because it is easier to learn a language while you live with the people who speak it, he explained. He added that English and Hindustani are his limit at present—English because it is his native tongue and Hindustani because he had to learn it to be able to communicate with the native soldiers in the army in the CBI theater.

MISS LINK IN COSTUME

Marian Link, Robert Miller, and Frederica Anderson

Speaker Tells Of Red Cross Work Overseas

Earl Z. McKay, former athletic coach at Dickinson Junior College, told the Williamsport Lions Club last night of his work with the Red Cross in Europe during the war.

The speaker described prisoner of war exchanges and presented a signal corps motion picture of his unit in action. He was a Red Cross field director.

William E. Price, president, conducted a short business meeting.

Guests included Joseph E. Perry, Harrisburg.