

LYCOMING

ALUMNI BULLETIN • SUMMER 1967

Where do we go from here?

WHERE HAVE THEY GONE?

Each year for the last nine years Dr. Otto L. Sander, Jr., associate professor of sociology, has assigned to one of his students the project of surveying the class which graduated five years previously. This year the survey was undertaken by Susan D. Fielding '68, editor of THE BELL, by means of a questionnaire sent to all members of the Class of 1962. The return rate of about 60 per cent (93 individuals) was slightly better than the response to previous surveys in the series.

"In the long run the best evaluation of the meaning of a college education is likely to result from studies of alumni." (Mervin B. Freedman, "Studies of College Alumni," The American College). In the spirit of this statement, Sue Fielding '68, surveyed the Class of '62 for opinions on a variety of subjects as well as factual data about the graduates themselves. The survey provided some interesting information about the Class of '62, which may also have application to other recent Lycoming graduates.

Although respondents to the survey represented a fourteen-state area, ranging from Massachusetts to California, forty-two of the respondents (45 per cent) have remained in Pennsylvania. This percentage represents a sizable decrease from the 63 per cent of the Class of '58 surveyed four years ago and may indicate a growing mobility on the part of the Lycoming graduate.

Marital Status

The age range of the respondents was from twenty-four to fifty-two, with twenty-six being the age most frequently mentioned. Some 80 per cent were married, none widowed or separated, and only one person, a male, had been divorced. He is remarried. Thirty-five of the ninety-three respondents were married during the year of their graduation or the year following it. The spouses of 23 per cent of the married alumni were Lycoming graduates also. Fifty-six of the married respondents (76 per cent) have at least one child. The average age of the offspring is four years.

The alumni named majors in sixteen courses. Most frequently mentioned was biology, followed in order by history, psychology, English, math, sociology, business administration, accounting, and economics. The education curriculum was the one most commonly followed; 59 per cent of the women and 24 per cent of the men had chosen it. The other most frequently mentioned curricula were arts and sciences and business administration.

Graduate Training

One half of the women graduates had returned to school for some graduate work. An even higher percentage of men (69 per cent) took graduate studies. The graduate schools mentioned more than once were New York University, The Pennsylvania State University, Drexel, Bucknell, Syracuse, Dickinson, American University, Bloomsburg State, Rutgers, and Temple. Twenty-eight per cent of the respondents had obtained advanced degrees. These included twenty master's degrees—M.A., M.S., M.Ed., M.S.L.S. (library science), M.S.W. (social work), and M.H.A. (hospital administration), in order of times mentioned—three bachelor of divinity degrees, one medical degree, and two dental degrees.

Employment

In their first five years of employment since graduation, 45 per cent of the graduates have changed jobs at least once, 13 per cent have changed two or three times. Thirty-nine of the graduates went into teaching first. Of these, twenty-eight are still teaching, but five of these are substitute teachers. An equal number have gone into various phases of business and industry, five each are in the government and the military, and four in full-time student status. There are three ministers, three medical technologists, two librarians and one doctor. Other occupations include housewives, college teachers and administrators, a hospital administrator, and a social worker.

Income

The average income of the 1962 male graduate has jumped from $5204 in his first year of employment to $9154 at the present. Women started at a lower income, $4208, and have not increased as much. At the present time the income of women graduates averages $5732.

Those surveyed were given a chance to list those courses that they would be sure to take if they were to attend Lycoming again. Sociology and psychology were mentioned most frequently, followed by economics, English, math, art, history, and an equal mention of music, chemistry, and philosophy.

Almost a third of the male respondents have had military experience. Of these twenty men, all but one enlisted in the service. One half of those who went into service indicated they had done so after college.

Attitudes Toward College

The study of the 1962 Lycoming graduates showed that 99 per cent of them would return to college. (Only one man said no.) Of the ninety-two people who would return to college, seventy (or 76 per cent) would return to Lycoming. Nine of the alumni would prefer to attend a large university, and two would go to a teacher's college. Other choices included a service academy, an art school, and a larger school which was not a university.

Satisfaction With Preparation

Seventy-nine of the respondents felt that Lycoming prepared them adequately for life after graduation, but many qualifications were added. Several thought that they derived the most benefit from the social life, the exposure, and experience of college rather than the specific courses. Some felt that it was a well-rounded education but that graduate school was necessary for the specifics.

Of the fifty-four responses to the question dealing with how well Lycoming prepared students for graduate work, as compared with other students of different undergraduate schools, forty felt that the preparation was excellent. Ten persons thought the preparation was adequate and only four thought that it was poor.

The alumni were also asked if they thought Lycoming prepared them well for their occupation, in comparison with their fellow workers. Eighty-three per cent of those surveyed said that they were well prepared.

Lycoming has been recommended to friends by seventy-nine alumni of the Class of 1962. An equal number would be willing to send their child to Lycoming. Many comments were added here by the respondents. For example, there were many who would consider sending their children, depending upon the child's major, whether he would be happy at such a school, and whether the family could afford it.

The small college atmosphere and the closeness of the relationship between students and professors were both mentioned by more than thirty respondents as the most satisfying aspects of the College. When asked to list those areas which most dissatisfied them, the alumni complained most of too much control over the fraternity system, chapel requirements, women's regulations, and inadequate facilities.

According to Kenneth Patrick in the report What They Think of Their Higher Education, "One of the best indications of personal satisfaction with the college attended or the course pursued is the answer to whether, upon reflection, the same patterns would be followed if one could live the period over again." If this is true, then Lycoming can be said to have generated a healthy enthusiasm among its alumni in the Class of '62.

PROFILE OF THE 1962 GRADUATE

The alumnus is a 26-year-old married man. His wife is also a college graduate, but not a graduate of Lycoming. They were married in 1962 and have one four-year-old girl and one child on the way. The three live in Pennsylvania. While attending Lycoming, the alumnus was a resident student, majoring in biology in the education curriculum. He has attended one other college or university full time and has held the same teaching job ever since he started working. His first yearly income was around $4700 and he is presently making around $7500. He is enthusiastic about his vocation and satisfied with his income.

The 1962 graduate indicated that, if he could relive his life, he would choose to go to college again, and furthermore, would want to come back to Lycoming. He thinks that his Lycoming education has prepared him adequately for life after graduation, for graduate school, and for his occupation.

Donald E. Shearer '59/doctor

A MAGNA CUM LAUDE graduate of Lycoming, Don Shearer went on to Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia and received his M.D. degree in 1963. After interning in the Williamsport Hospital from July, 1963, to July, 1964, he went into service at Ft. Myer, Arlington, Va. A captain in the Medical Corps, Don spent four months in the Dominican Republic during the recent crisis in that country. After military service Don returned to Montoursville, his home town, and set up general practice. While he had numerous opportunities to go other places, he always planned to come back to this area. Don is married to the former Kay McLaughlin, a local girl, and they have two children. While at Lycoming, Don majored in biology and feels he was adequately prepared for medical school. What he did miss was the extracurricular part of campus life, for he lived at home and circumstances required him to work his way through college. Still, he recalls, he had the advantage of small classes and personal attention. He feels, therefore, that he accomplished what he set out to do and the college did too.

ON their way

Kenneth R. Arthur '58/minister

A NATIVE OF ALTOONA, PA., Ken Arthur is presently the pastor of Watsonstown Methodist Church. He is married and has three children. Following graduation from Lycoming Ken attended Wesley Theological Seminary, where he received his S.T.B. (bachelor of sacred theology) degree in 1961. His earlier pastorates have been at Allenwood-Elmsport and in Orbisonia. He has also served as guest chaplain to the General Assembly for the State of Pennsylvania and Chaplain for the Day in the U. S. Congress. A philosophy major at Lycoming, Ken feels he was adequately prepared for both theological school and the ministry. He particularly appreciates the fact that he was not encouraged to concentrate on religion in college. The liberal arts program, he feels, gave him a taste of many things—music appreciation, art appreciation, and other subjects which made him conversant with different people. Having taken a vocational course in high school, Ken came to college poorly prepared, flunked out, and made Dean's List by the third year. Thus, he feels it is to the college's credit that the faculty took the time and interest to help him become a good student.

Martha Hickerson '62/librarian

AN ENGLISH MAJOR at Lycoming, Martha was qualified to teach but felt a last-minute reluctance to go into that vocation. A librarian friend of her mother's in her home town of Chevy Chase, Md., encouraged her to go into library work instead. In an interview with the administrators of the Montgomery (Md.) County Library System, Martha was told that they would employ her as a professional librarian's assistant if she would undertake graduate work in library science. Martha immediately began part-time study at nearby Catholic University and by summer, 1964, had amassed sufficient credits to be made a full librarian. In 1966 she was awarded her M.S.L.S. (master of science in library science) and is now qualified to do any type of library work. Martha's first responsibility as a librarian was the supervision of a children's room in a public library. Now she is a "young adult" librarian in the Chevy Chase Library, a job which entails work with a special collection of books for high school students and includes trips to the local high schools to discuss assignments and try to coordinate her library's facilities with those of the schools. Recalling her days at Lycoming, Martha now feels that she should have worked much harder, should have taken a greater variety of courses. In comparison to the older Catholic University students Martha felt unsophisticated and less well-prepared. She believes that students must be impressed with the fact that graduation from college is not an end but only a beginning.

Clinton Smith '55/lawyer

A POLITICAL SCIENCE MAJOR at Lycoming, Clint Smith went on to Dickinson School of Law, where he received his bachelor of law degree in 1958. That same year he passed the bar exam and commenced a six-month tour of active duty in the U. S. Army. In June of 1959 he was admitted to practice in the courts of Lycoming County and became associated with the firm of Judge D. M. Larrabee and Don L. Larrabee '23 in the general practice of law. In 1964 he was named an assistant to district attorney Henry G. Hager III, a position he will hold until January, 1968. Last fall, he helped form the partnership of Stuart, Murphy, Hager and Smith. Clint is married to the former Mary C. Johnson '59, who was Lycoming's May Queen in her senior year. Looking back on his college life, Clint feels that Lycoming very definitely prepared him for both law school and his career. He does feel, however, that he should have had more courses in English composition and grammar, because lawyers need to develop skill in expressing themselves. Today, he would advise anyone going into law to take more courses along this line and all the speech courses he can get. But since the law schools would rather have someone who studied the liberal arts than someone who received specialized training, Clint feels the most valuable part of his college life was getting a well-rounded liberal arts education.

Where Are They Going?

'67 Graduates Take Off for New Horizons

In a questionnaire passed out on Commencement Day, members of the 1967 graduating class were asked to specify their plans for the future. Out of a total of 312 in the graduating classes of February, June, and September, 264 students returned their questionnaires, providing the following information:

Fifty-four graduates (20.4 per cent) plan to attend graduate school at forty-two different universities. This figure includes twelve who are attending theological seminaries, six who plan to attend law school, and two who are going to medical school.

Ninety-one graduates (34.4 per cent) plan to teach in the public school systems of twelve states. At the present time forty-five graduates have teaching jobs in Pennsylvania. Average starting salary in teaching for the forty-six graduates reporting was $5,483.

Forty-three graduates (16.7 per cent) plan to go into business and industry. Twelve more have taken jobs with various government agencies (county, state, and federal). Average starting salary in business, industry, and government for the thirty graduates reporting is $7,662.

Twenty-seven graduates have plans for military service, while three plan to enter the Peace Corps. Five chose other areas, such as church work or marriage. Fifty-one graduates either had not been placed or did not indicate their plans on the questionnaire.

Matthew D. Karash, a chemistry major, will do graduate work in chemistry at Michigan State University. Matt was named the Outstanding Graduate in Chemistry at Lycoming by the local section of the American Chemical Society.

Ronald L. Krauss, a religion major, will attend Yale Divinity School on a scholarship. Ron was selected to appear in the publication Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

Carol M. Davis, a biology major and cum laude graduate, will attend the school of Physical Therapy of Western Reserve University on a scholarship. Carol was named Outstanding Woman by the Associated Women Students.

Ronald C. Travis, a political science major, will attend Dickinson Law School. A star forward on the basketball team, Ron was the second highest basketball scorer in Lycoming's history and twice received the Tamahawk Award, which goes to the best all-round athlete.

Sue Simmons, a political science major and magna cum laude graduate, will teach elementary school in the Marple-Newtown School District. Sue was chosen the outstanding elementary student teacher for the second semester.

Fredric A. Brightman will attend Andover Newton Theological School on a full-tuition grant. A history major, Rick was the recipient of this year's Best Student Library Award.

Terrance H. Fregly, a business major, will join the Air Force Pilot Training Program at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas. Terry was photographer for the 1967 Arrow.

Edward L. Foley, Jr., a magna cum laude graduate, will attend the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine. A biology major, Ed was president of the Student Government Association for the 1966-67 academic year.

Elaine Wetzel will teach high school in Chatham, N. J. A German major and a cum laude graduate, Elaine was the recipient of the outstanding secondary school teacher award for two consecutive years.

Gilbert W. Hardy, a biology major, will serve in the Peace Corps in Ethiopia.

Richard Wagner, a busness major, will attend Fordham Law School. A cum laude graduate, Dick received the 1967 Wall Street Business Award as the student majoring in business administration with the highest cumulative average.

Walter G. Edmonds, a music major and cum laude graduate, will attend Yale Divinity School on a scholarship. President of the senior class, Walt received the Chieftain Award, highest honor given a graduating senior.

Robert A. Lawhorn, a mathematics major, will participate in the Bethlehem Steel Loop Program, a management training program in Bethlehem, Pa., and will do graduate work in information science at Lehigh University.

Debora Dunkle, a political science major and cum laude graduate, will study political behavior at the University of Essex, Colchester, England.

Edward R. Jones, a business major, will join the Sylvania Company in Buffalo, N. Y. Ed was elected most valuable football player at the Homecoming game two consecutive years.

Donna Dunning will join VISTA. A history major, Donna was recipient of the outstanding secondary school teaching award for the second semester.

New DIRECTIONS for the College?

—by PHILIP R. MARSHALL, Dean of the College

THE Executive Committee of the Alumni Association asked me to speak at the June meeting and to write for those few of you who couldn't attend that meeting concerning the academic future of Lycoming College. At times I think I should leave such matters to President Wertz, who has more experience at it. Nevertheless, I accepted readily, for I am convinced that the more straightforward communication all groups of the Lycoming community have with each other the better this school will become.

I am sure we will all agree that Lycoming College has come a long way since it granted its first A.B. degrees in 1949. After all one does not create instant quality in higher education. We may not all agree that Lycoming has a long way to go. But whatever each of us may believe about the quality of the present school we should all see the necessity for any school to seek improvement and to change as it strives to meet the challenge of the future as well as of the present. Certainly we all desire that Lycoming College be a good school and in fact an excellent one. We all want our school to do the best job possible in the field of higher education in the liberal arts tradition.

Perhaps I should define for you what I mean when I speak of a good or excellent school and what I mean by doing the best possible job here at Lycoming. Specifically I mean that Lycoming College should obtain the best possible faculty and the best possible students and educate those students in the best way and to the greatest extent possible. Now, I still haven't said anything, for you will not really understand what I mean by "best" in each of these categories until you know me and my educational theories much better than you do now.

Let me help you just a little. The best faculty members are those well-trained in their subject field, interested in the students, dedicated to their education, and highly effective in the classroom and laboratory. Preferably they should be productive scholars and certainly they will keep up with current work in their fields. But they will not be more interested in research than in students. They will most certainly not seek to associate themselves with an educational institution merely because this is the place where they can do research.

At Lycoming College these faculty members will also be those who are in agreement with the broad concept of the church-related college—or at least not antagonistic to it—and comfortable within it. This does not mean that they must be in total agreement with Lycoming as it is now and should not attempt to persuade other faculty, the administration, and the Board of Directors to alter it, for all such institutions are subject to change as the general concepts are re-evaluated and reinterpreted.

I do not mean that Lycoming should strive to become a school where all students have board scores of 700 or better. For the best students are not necessarily those with the greatest ability. Rather we should set our own standards of academic excellence and then admit only those students who have the necessary ability to perform adequately within them. The best students are then those with this ability who are receptive to education at Lycoming and are either well-motivated to learn or can be motivated. They will be interested in many facets of academic life. They will be responsive to cultural events in many forms either when they come to Lycoming, or, by reason of their receptive nature, when they leave. They will want to learn more about religion and theology. They will learn about society and its ills. They will be disturbed by its inequities. And when they leave Lycoming they will be, as is the institution, "Devoted to the vocation of humanity."

This does not tell the entire story of either group, and we could spend many hours clarifying the gen-

This article is taken from a speech given by Dean Philip R. Marshall at the annual Alumni Banquet on June 3, 1967.

Two proposals currently under study may affect the academic future of Lycoming eralities involved. But what of the outstanding education which we want these faculty to give these students? This is the subject of endless debate among our faculty and with others interested in Lycoming and in hundreds of other similar institutions. I have been given a short space to tell you about two possible avenues for Lycoming to take in the future. One is a graduate program. The other is year-round operation.

Graduate Program

A few weeks ago I talked with an associate director of the Carnegie Corporation exploring the possibilities of financial aid for Lycoming. Since Lycoming is not yet one of the better known schools of America he professed to know little about it ("Where is it located—Williamsport? Where's that?") and asked me to give him a brief description. When I informed him that we had, twenty years ago changed from a junior to a senior college he wanted to know why. "Why," he said, "didn't you just try to become the best darn junior college in the East?" He used a different adjective but this is a Methodist school and so I editorialize just a bit.

Why, indeed? And why now should we add a graduate school? In my opinion there would be only one legitimate reason, and that is to make Lycoming a better college. Graduate schools are expensive and we do not have excess funds to expend on the venture. I personally know of no instance in which the addition of a graduate program has improved the undergraduate program. Many schools have made this addition under the mistaken impression that this would automatically add stature and status and therefore create instant improvement. Most graduate departments would only drain our limited resources. We would have to compete for graduate students with already established schools, many with great financial resources. There is a school (unnamed but moderately well-known) not too far from us which is striving to increase a now modest graduate program. Their graduate students are now—on the average—well below the quality of their undergraduates. I, at least, do not see how we could in the foreseeable future do as well.

But there is one area which is different in many respects. And that is in the field of education. It seems to me that a MAT (Master of Arts in Teaching) program has real potential for Lycoming. For one thing there is a built-in demand. Permanent certification in the state of Pennsylvania now requires 24 hours of course work beyond the A.B. And all elementary and secondary schools offer a higher salary schedule for those with the master's degree. There seems to be little doubt that a master's degree will be required in the not too distant future.

Hence the need and the demand seem to be present. But how do the students and the college benefit? For whatever reason, it is commonly accepted that education departments are low on the academic totem pole. Even sociologists and psychologists look down on them. They are legislated against in a variety of ways. And much of this is deserved. A sparse curriculum is stretched to meet the total hours required by state certification standards. Irrelevant material is added as filler. Repetition is piled on repetition. But not all is useless. There is much of value to be imparted to our future teachers. And it is not true that "those who can, do; those who can't, teach—and those who can't teach teach teachers."

This area needs to be strengthened. Moving it to the graduate level may seem on the surface ridiculous, but this is not so. Not only does such a step remove education courses from the undergraduate curriculum thereby enabling us to improve this aspect of college training for about a third of our students, but it enables us to contemplate a totally different approach to the training of elementary and secondary school teachers. And this may be just what is necessary to effect a much needed change. All courses may be more closely tied to the actual teaching experience, an area generally conceded to be the place where one really learns about education.

It is precisely this that Lycoming must do in the future. Rather than spread ourselves too thin in order to be all things to whoever might be interested we must do the best possible job in that which we are now doing.

Year-Round Operation

The second half of my assignment was to give you some information about a possible calendar change at Lycoming. Only a relatively small number of schools have actually moved to a program involving a complete academic program in the summer as well as in the commonly accepted academic year from September to June. But a number of others are known to be considering such a program and Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare John Gardner has stated that within the next ten years all schools must investigate year-round operation very carefully.

A number of schools which went to one form of year-round operation, the trimester, several years ago have been acknowledged failures in the effort. The best known of these is The University of Pittsburgh, but the state universities of Florida have had their troubles as well and Harpur College will abandon its trimester program at the end of the 1966-67 academic year.

With these known failures as examples why should any school consider risking a similar fate? There are a variety of reasons, including the apparent financial advantages, the requirement of exercising proper stewardship of expensive educational facilities, the lure of attractive educational innovations, etc. And there are the examples of successful institutions as well. Beloit, Kalamazoo, and The University of Michigan are perhaps the best known examples. Eisenhower College, the brainchild of Dr. Earl McGrath, will open in September, 1968, on a full-fledged year-round program. Dr. McGrath has been one of the most ardent supporters of what he sees as the only reasonable choice for colleges and universities.

What has Lycoming been doing? For more than a year and a half the topic has been under discussion by the faculty and certain of its committees. A task force appointed by President Wertz to function during the 1965-66 academic year gave the subject careful consideration (see Lycoming Alumni Bulletin, Summer, 1966). Six special committees studied various aspects of year-round operation during the summer of 1966 and reported to the faculty at its annual workshop last September. And further study has been carried on by the Educational Advisory Committee during the past academic year. I have reported to the Board of Directors, to the parents, and to the alumni and, at a Calendar Convention, several faculty reported to the students. The subject has been widely debated both in and out of faculty meetings.

And now still another committee has been appointed. But this time it has been charged with the task of constructing a complete program. It is working daily through the summer at this job. It has visited campuses where year-round operation has been more or less successful (Beloit and Kalamazoo) and one where it has been abandoned (Harpur).

In addition to myself the committee is composed of Mr. John Hollenback, chairman of the Department of Business Administration; Dr. Glen Morgan, associate professor of music; Dr. John Radspinner, chairman of the Department of Chemistry; and Dr. Thompson Rhodes, chairman of the Department of Religion. We are considering carefully the presumed advantages of a calendar change; the elimination of the post-Christmas lame duck session; the possibility of instituting an intensive four-to-six-week orientation period combined with a course designed to acclimate the student to the academic world of higher education; a work or career-service period; overseas study; increased flexibility for faculty and students in terms of courses offered and time off for graduate study and research; an integration of education into the total experience of the student; and certainly the financial aspects which presumably should enable Lycoming to offer a better program and a richer experience at a lower cost to the student.

But we are considering the possible disadvantages as well. Certainly those institutions which have tried and failed have encountered student and/or faculty opposition to some aspects of their programs. Perhaps they made mistakes that Lycoming can avoid, but we must know what they were. Is it simply that the traditional summer vacation for faculty and students is too ingrained in American education to be overcome? Are vacations at other times not acceptable? Are sufficient job opportunities for our students available only during the summer months? And what of the effects on extra-curricular activities such as fraternities, athletics, musical organizations, etc.? None of these problems can be overlooked.

The committee did not start with a set program. We have considered trimesters and quarters; semester systems and variations of the so-called Jan Plan or "miniterm" programs. But we have also considered plans which would be unique to Lycoming—at least in part. A calendar including a five-week term for freshmen and three thirteen-week terms is one of these.

Colleges have a strong tendency to stagnate. Many are dead but do not know it. A leading educator has estimated that two-thirds of our American colleges are making no contribution to the educational scene. And most of them are the privately supported liberal arts colleges which are facing a severe challenge from public education, including the burgeoning junior colleges. To survive in this situation Lycoming must do two things: (1) provide the best education possible, and (2) keep the cost as low as possible. Neither a graduate program nor a calendar change is a panacea. If either is accepted by the Faculty and the Board of Directors it will only be because a convincing case has been made that this is what Lycoming College should do. And if the evidence be indeed convincing I for one cannot believe that an institution which has twice in the past forty years made much more radical changes in its status will lack the courage to act positively and boldly.

Track stars Bill Neff, left, and Dan Bythewood, right, present a trophy on behalf of the team to coach Ray Jamison for guiding them to their most successful season.

SPRING SPORTS ROUNDUP

THREE of the four Lycoming spring sports teams compiled winning records. The track squad, under new head coach Ray Jamison, was undefeated in five dual meets, won two out of three triangular meets, and finished second in the Middle Atlantic Conference College Division championships.

Nels Phillips' tennis team registered their eighth straight winning season with eight victories and four losses. The golf team, coached by athletic director Dave Bussey this year, won seven matches while losing five. The baseball squad of Coach Dutch Burch ended the season with two wins and eight losses.

In 1962, Raymond Jamison retired as a teacher in the Williamsport High School and joined the Lycoming faculty as assistant professor of physics and chemistry. At Williamsport High he had developed some of the finest high school track and cross-country teams in Pennsylvania.

Jamison returned to the coaching ranks this year when he accepted the head coaching duties in track from newly appointed football mentor, Budd Whitehill. The squad responded to the new coach by winning all five dual meets and two out of three triangular meets. The only mark on the record is a second-place triangular meet finish behind powerful Lock Haven State.

The Lycoming track men climaxed the year by finishing second in the MAC College Division championships at the University of Delaware. They finished with 41 team points while PMC Colleges won its third straight championship with 45 points.

Lycoming records were broken twenty-three times during the past season. The big point men for Lycoming were Bill Neff, sophomore from Wilmington, Del. and Dan Bythewood, junior from Hempstead, N. Y. In the MAC championships, Neff won the pole vault event, finished second in the high jump and the 440-yard intermediate hurdles, took fifth place in the long jump, and anchored the Lycoming mile-relay team that set a new Lycoming record of 3:22 in finishing third. Bythewood finished second in both the 100 and 220-yard dashes and was on the relay team.

Three out of the four losses inflicted on the Lycoming tennis team were by the closest score possible in collegiate tennis, 5-4. The eight victories were by wide margins. The biggest disappointment was the 5-4 loss to Dickinson, a team Lycoming has never been able to defeat in tennis.

Two freshmen, Bill Harper, from Yardley, and Tim LaBoria, from Syracuse, N. Y., had the best won-lost records in the singles competition. Harper had a 9-2 log while LaBoria won 9 and lost 3.

A number of factors contributed to the baseball team's losing season. Lack of depth, especially in pitching and catching, hurt the team, as veteran hurler Ed Paup, senior from Seneca, was forced to carry the brunt of the pitching chores. Weak hitting also contributed to the problems of Coach Dutch Burch. The team concluded the season with an encouraging 12-5 victory over Juniata that denied the losers a winning season.

Senior Bud Frampton, from Linwood, was a bright spot in the Warrior lineup. He led the team in hitting with a .423 average, was the winning pitcher in both Lycoming victories, and played either in the outfield or at second base when not on the mound.

The golf team concluded another successful season. The linksmen won seven out of their first eight matches and then dropped their last four on their way to a record of seven wins and five losses. The most gratifying win of the season was the 9½-8½ victory over Dickinson, Lycoming's first win over the Red Devils in the sport.

The play of freshman Gary Bower, from Williamsport, was a high point of the year. The young golfer, who is one of the most promising young amateurs in the Williamsport area, won ten out of twelve matches and finished tied for fifth in the Middle Atlantic Conference golf championships.

ALUMNI WEEKEND

First Annual Alumni-Faculty Golf Tournament participants: Dean Philip R. Marshall, Jack Zimmerman, assistant professor of education, and T. Max Hall '56.

Well-wishers greet Dr. J. Milton Skeath at his recognition dinner Friday evening, June 1.

Registration was held in North Hall.

Mrs. Eva Faus McKelvey '97 registers for her 70th class reunion. Watching are her nephew, Dr. Arthur L. Faus, associate professor of philosophy, and R. Andrew Lady '49, assistant to the president.

HOMECOMING '67
OCTOBER 7

A record 75 per cent attendance was achieved when twelve of the sixteen remaining members of the Class of 1917 returned for their 50th reunion.

'67 MELINDA L. ALFORD has joined the staff for the Madison rural parish, N. Y., as director of Christian education. Melinda will have responsibility for teacher training, and for broadening and deepening the work of Christian education, with a special immediate emphasis on vacation time educational programs and week-day rehearsed time classes. Melinda's addition to the parish staff was made possible by a grant of funds from the Conference Centennial Crusade. The Madison Parish is composed of eight churches in the northern part of Madison County—Bennetts Corners, Clockville, Eaton, Perryville, Peterboro, Pratts Hollow, Siloam, and Stockbridge. Melinda was a regular student helper in the alumni office at Lycoming, and her fiance, KARL SOUIER '68, who is also one of our student right-hands, keeps us informed of her progress.

HELEN RADSPINNER received her A.B. degree here June 4, while husband, John, professor of chemistry at Lycoming, marched in the procession. Helen began her undergraduate studies in February, 1961, at Lycoming, transferring from the Fine Arts School of Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa. She enrolled in the music curriculum as a voice major. Enjoying life to the fullest is the motto of MILDRED ENGLISH HIVELEY. She is the author of The Moday Mystery, a mystery novel published in October, 1966. In addition, her interest in genealogy and travel keeps her active, along with being a junior high school teacher of social studies in the Williamsport School District. Mildred has just completed three years as a representative-at-large of the Executive Board of the Lycoming College Alumni Association. She has two daughters, Louise and Joan. Her travels have taken her to every state in the Union except Alaska; to Canada, Mexico, the Caribbean, and to fourteen countries in Europe; and to the Far East, with visits to Australia, New Zealand, and the islands of the Pacific. Last year, Mildred, visited the Scandinavian countries and also the capitals of the communist countries of Bulgaria (Sofia), Hungary (Budapest), Rumania (Bucharest) and the Soviet Union (Moscow and Leningrad). She also spent ten days in Switzerland (mostly in Zermatt) and visited Vienna, Austria. This year she will embark on two cruises—one on the Aegean Sea from Greece to Turkey and the other from Bergen, Finland, to North Cape, which is as far north as you can get to the North Pole from Finland. She will visit Lisbon, Madrid, the islands of Crete and Rhodes, Kusadasi and Istanbul in Turkey, the Dalmatian coast of Yugoslavia, Venice, Berlin, Oslo, and London. It sounds as exciting and intriguing as Mildred's novel.

'24 A testimonial dinner was given for The Rev. VICTOR B. HANN at Allenberry, Pa., marking the completion of twenty-five years of service as superintendent of The Methodist Home for Children at Shiremanstown. Dr. Hann remarks, "When we were appointed to serve we had to change our whole pattern of thinking. It's not an easy job to take care of someone else's youngsters. You find that you live and grow so closely to them they become a part of you and you a part of them." At first the home took in only orphans, later expanding its role to include youngsters from broken or unstable homes, the needy, and the neglected. "There has arisen less demand for simple custodial care," he explained. "Now the demand is for the specialized service to look after the social and emotional needs of the children." While the task is not an easy one the rewards for a job well done are tremendous, he noted. Dr. Hann stated that about 55 per cent of the children at the home leave when a parent remarries or when they or their family are stabilized. Forty-five per cent complete high school while living at the home. Some excel; two students have gone on to become class valedictorians, one a salutatorian, and many others entered college, nursing schools, trade schools, and government jobs. In the future the home hopes to establish a home for unwed mothers where they will be able to take care of twenty or thirty girls. Before coming to the home, Dr. Hann served seventeen years in pastorates at New Bloomfield, Watsonstown, Harrisburg and Lewistown. In 1956 he received an honorary doctor of humanities degree from Lycoming College.

Two proposals currently under study may affect Lycoming's academic future

Arlene Little, a psychology major, will do graduate work at Brown University. Summa cum laude graduate and mother of a nine-year-old, Mrs. Little is the first Lycoming student to receive the coveted Danforth Graduate Fellowship for Women. The program provides continuing education for women who have experienced a break in their academic careers.
