UNCLE SAM'S RECIPE FOR BOILING HAM

Dr. E. W. Magruder, of the Virginia state department of agriculture, the great authority on curing hams and bacon, is quoted in a bulletin of the United States department of agriculture, as giving the following directions for boiling a ham:

"A large ham—say eighteen pounds—is much better flavored, sweeter and more juicy than a small one—say under eight pounds.

"Wash the ham thoroughly, then soak in cold water several hours, the time varying with the size of the ham. This soaking is to dissolve out the excess of salt. The ham is then put in a boiler full of boiling water. The temperature should then be lowered slightly and the boiler just barely boiling for four and onehalf hours for an eighteen-pound ham; that is, a quarter of an hour for each pound of ham. If the hams are larger or smaller, vary the time to suit the weight. As the water boils out, add fresh boiling water, and always keep the boiler full. For very large hams it is advisable to boil in two waters.

"Why should the ham be put in boiling water? Portions of the lean meat, the albumen and some of the juices and flavors are soluble in warm water, while boiling water coagulates the albumen just as it does the white of an egg. So, if put in cold water and heated to the boiling point, some albumen and much of the delicate flavors which are so sought after in hams would be dissolved out by the water as it warmed up to the boiling point; but if put into boiling water, the albumen is coagulated at once on the surface and all the juices and flavors are sealed in and kept there till eaten. While cooking, the ham is just kept at the boiling point of water, which is sufficient heat to cook it thoroughly without separating the fiber or boiling it to pieces, as a rapid or hard boiling would do."

ALL READY

He—I suppose I am expected at your house tonight?
