President Harding and Secretary Hughes are anxious that the coming conference on the limiting of armaments shall be open and above board.

How Bad Is Business?

"How is Business?"

"Bad, very bad; the worst I have ever experienced."

The above is a conversation frequently heard in offices and stores.

That business is bad there can be no denial of the fact. Business is worse than it should be and more business can be done if the effort is made.

It is true the people are buying less than in prosperous times and it is also true that they are still buying large quantities of materials, but they are now seeking value for every dollar expended.

Every industry has decreased wages and prices for their products and the buyers are making their purchases where they are shown the goods are offered at the lower prices.

Many merchants are advertising the present prices as compared with prices a year ago. They are making displays in their stores of what $20 would buy a year ago and what can be purchased for the same sum today.

Business is bad here, but as people continue to eat, wear clothes, use household and other articles, these things must be replaced and are being replaced.

Merchants everywhere are making strong efforts for trade and the ones who are letting the opportunity pass will suffer greater losses in the future.

Street Work.

Council has appropriated $12,000 for permanent work on streets and $2,230 for repair work.

Dissatisfaction has been expressed in council over the work being done by the borough. Charges were made that the workers were loafing and that the members of the street committee are not working harmoniously.

It would be peculiar if these charges were not true. The street committee is held responsible for the proper performance of the work yet every one knows the committee serves without recompense.

Council knows that no street committee can secure proper returns for expenditures by employing a number of men and then let these men run the job.

Were a good man obtained, he would gradually make a new survey of the entire borough; plan the new streets to be opened and at the same time organize a small working force to use the borough's road making tools and keep up repair work constantly.

The engineer would keep council constantly informed of conditions existing throughout the borough and would do away with the useless discussions that council engages in over matters on which they have no actual data.

Doing the street work in a proper manner would cost less than the methods now used and would give to the taxpayers far better streets and would be a saving in many other ways.

SCENARIO CHIEF

ADVISES WRITERS

Drama should be the predominant ingredient of a motion picture story, according to Lucien Hubbard, chief of the scenario department at Universal City.

In addition to the predominating ingredient of drama there may be opportunity for fine photographic effects, for the women characters to wear elaborate costumes—even a moral may be gently conveyed—but everything must be subordinate to the dramatic quality of the story.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—In a New York jewelry store Philip Severn, United States consular agent, notices a small box which attracts him.

CHAPTER II.—Finding the place mentioned in the writing apparently deserted, Severn visits a saloon in the vicinity.

I Could Perceive Something of the Fellow Now.

My thoughts were not so occupied with my guide as with the problem of how I was to escape from him.

My heart failed me as I stared about at the bare walls, and forward to where a heavy curtain draped the end of the passage.

He pressed something in the side-wall, sliding back a panel, and disappeared, the rough boards returning instantly into place.

(To Be Continued)

The private doorway through which Wine had disappeared gave me the thought that there might also be others.

"No. Wine said that was too risky. I walked from the car line. What's up? Do you know, Captain?"

"Why you call me that? I tell you my name!"

"It's safe enough in here, but I'll be careful outside. What was this meeting called for?"

"It was a message from Washington, orders maybe, that we act soon, I hope it."

"From Washington? Is Mendez here?"

"Saprista, no! Can he move without a dozen spies at his heels? He find messenger no one ever suspect. She bring the word."

"She? A woman?"

"Sure! That was better. No one know her; no one ever see her with our people. It was a good trick and fool the pigs."

"But who is the woman?"

"The other uttered a groan, exclamation of disgust.

"If I know, you suppose I tell? Not much, but I do not know. They trust her—is it not enough? 'Tis my guess she come special for to do this."

"She is a Chilean then?"

"Maybe; maybe American, Spanish. What difference if she be in our service? They know what she is; tonight she is Marie Gessler—it has the sound of Switzerland. Beyond this I care nothing."

"But you have seen her, perhaps?"

"Not a sight; none of the boys have. She was to meet Alva at Times square late noon. I went with him, but no girl—just a messenger boy there with a note in code. Something had frightened the lady, and she made a night appointment over here."

"Here! How did she know the way out?"

"She didn't, for the matter of that; but she had been tipped off on Jans' place, and agreed to be there as soon as it was dark. I'm wondering if she showed up; let's go in and see."

The three moved off down the passage, still conversing in subdued tones, the sharp accent of the Spaniard most prominent, and I became acutely aware of the black silence in which I stood.

There was no occasion for me to risk my life farther in an effort to learn more. I had located the secret rendezvous of this gang of revolutionary plotters. I was aware of their connection with the Chilean Junta at Washington, and it would be a comparatively easy matter now to capture them red-handed. I saw therefore no reason why I should venture further, or endeavor to learn in detail the nature of this message entrusted to the girl for delivery.

My duty now was to report what I had discovered, when the prompt arrest of Alva, and a few others, would end the whole scheme. It seemed simple enough, if I could only find my way out safely.

But escape unobserved was far from being assured. Any retreat by way of the lighted passage was impossible; there were guards there at both ends; the only hope lay in a blind effort forward.

I accepted the only course possible, and began to feel my way to the left, striking the wall of rough boarding, until it widened out into what was apparently the larger room beyond.

No sound reached me from any direction, the silence and darkness oppressing me, as though they had weight.

Yet one fact became more and more clear—the deliberate purpose with which this deserted factory had been prepared for a secret rendezvous. Apparently, from without, it stood grim, desolate and deserted, yet the interior arrangements were such that conspirators could meet securely inside, protected from observation, in rooms through whose walls no gleam of light might be visible from either street or alley.

Wholesale Business Shows a Gradual Improvement; Retail Trade is Slow

Instead of waiting for some mysterious set of forces to restore good times, the people of the United States have settled down to the grim and sober business of working out their own salvation.

While the return to better times is certain to be slow, he says, there can be no doubt as to the final recovery.

"The story of the present business depression," says Mr. Douglas, "is very similar to other depressions which have occurred during the past half century."

"One of the earmarks of past depressions was the fantastic schemes advanced to prevent the return of such eras. These schemes included the stabilization of prices and doing something to the currency so that its purchasing power would always be the same.

"The chronicle in industrial life is one of better business in leather, especially in boots and shoes; lower prices in an increasing number of makes of automobiles, and of good business in automobile sundries; lower prices in oil with the likelihood of consequent decreased production; continued dullness in mining; some improvement in clothing; production in steel and iron down to lower levels and with reduced prices yet with slight increase in sales of some of the finished products; a generally good movement in summer seasonable goods; slow increase in construction as the costs of material and of labor decline in different sections; more particularly in the large cities; better wholesale trade in general but of smaller volume of retail business in the large centers."
